Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Horn, of Atmore, Rt. 1, Escambia County, own and operate 456 acres. They started out as tenant farmers thirty years ago but today own the 456 acres. In addition they rent 91 acres.

Annually about 150 acres of the land are planted to corn, averaging about 35 bushels per acre. Slightly over 50 acres are planted to cotton averaging almost a bale per acre. Oats are planted on 165 acres and produce about 50 bushels per acre. Peanuts are planted in about 44 acres of the corn and produce about 1200 pounds of runner and Spanish peanuts per acre. They produce about 125 bags of Irish potatoes per acre on 22 acres and about 300 gallons of syrup on 3 acres. About 100 bushels of sweet potatoes are produced each year on about an acre. Eleven acres of the land are devoted to pecans. In addition to interplanting corn with peanuts Mr. Horn often interplants corn with soybeans, velvet beans and cowpeas. In fact he planted and grazed about 4.5 acres of soybeans, 142

A visit to any of the five community empress located in the five community canneries located in the five canned is taken as toll in order to make the plant self-sustaining. Each customer carries some wood for fuel. The complete capacity of the plant has never been reached but 600 quarts is considered a busy day and 1000. A visit to any of the five community canneries located in Enterprise, Elba, Zion Chapel, Goodman and Kinston communities would "open the eyes" of one who thought of the canning season as thought of the canning season as when a "plant-to-can" movement was inaugurated. when a "plant-to-can" movement was inaugurated. The initial step was community surveys made by the vocational teachers of individual families. These reached back through the past three years to ascertain the family's past achievements in food preservation, and to learn their actual needs. In most instances there was need to plant in quantity in order to can on the same basis.

Into the Kitchen

THE spring house, long a favorite in the country for food preservation, "has moved into the kitchen." In rural homes with cheap electric service, food is now kept fresh in modern electric refrigerators—so convenient and economical to operate.

Our effort to extend electric service to the rural communities of Alabama began in 1923 and today, as a result, thousands of Alabama farms have city conveniences.

Our rural engineers will be glad to discuss with you the operation and low cost of the conveniences.
